Their Breathing

2020- (ongoing)

Triggered by the COVID-19 pandemic, "Their Breathing" is an artistic exploration aimed at sensing the presence of unseen others. By pouring transparent silicone resin into discarded trash left by anonymous passersby and creating sculptures that replicate the shapes of these items, the project seeks to uncover traces of human actions embedded in these objects. The sculptures, created by replicating the shapes of discarded trash, are returned to their original locations, where they are photographed and documented.

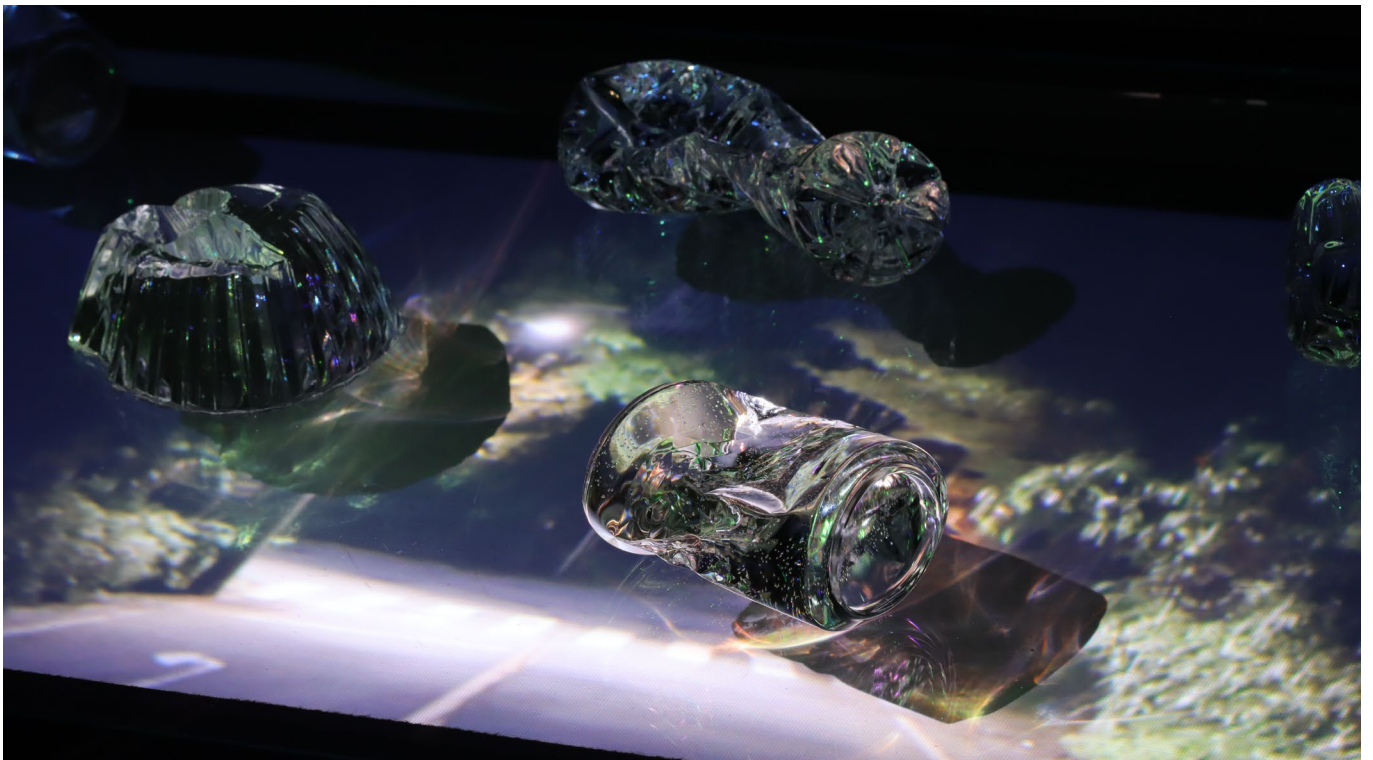

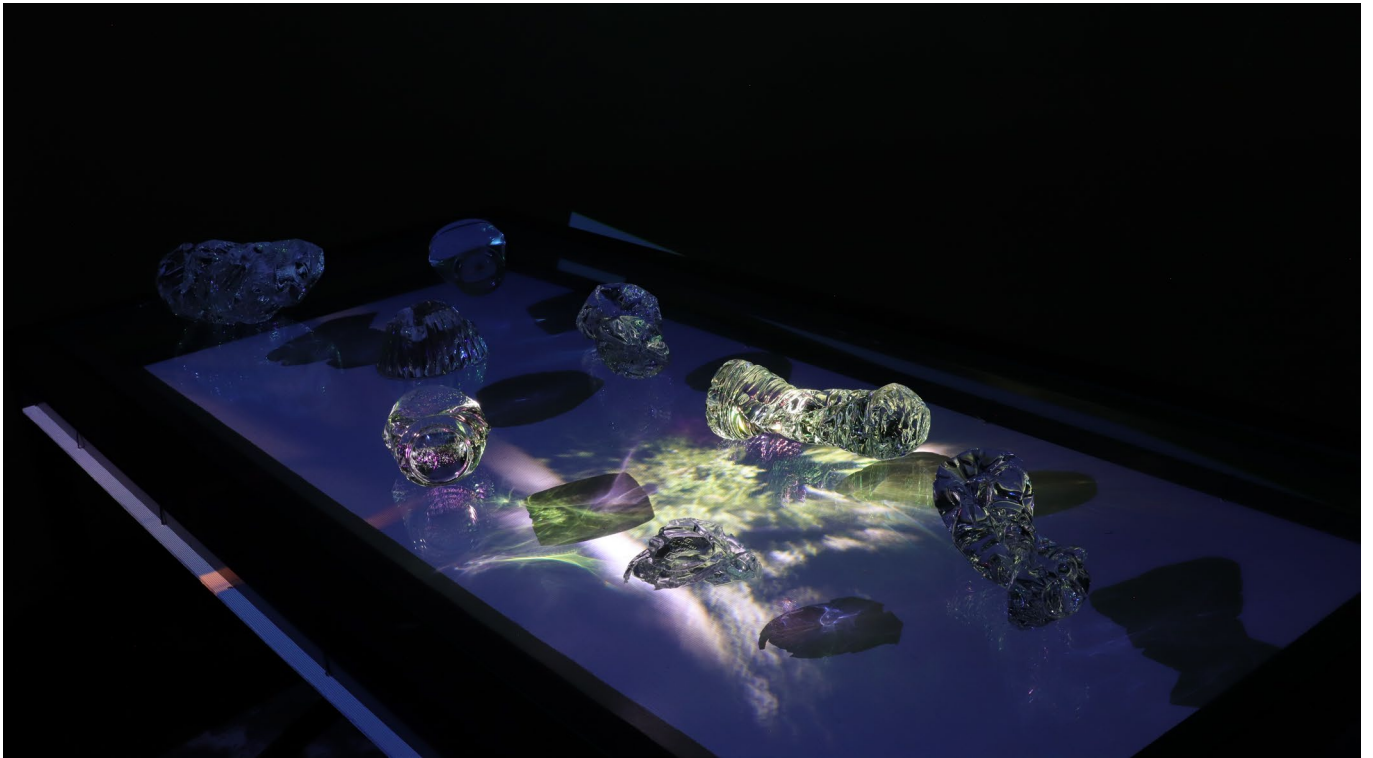

Through the act of isolating the shapes of these objects, which bear the marks of someone else's actions, the project attempts to reveal the intangible essence of those actions. Although the original owners of such discarded items are almost always absent, these objects carry a profound sense of certainty—a tangible proof that someone once existed in that space and performed an action.

The shapes, created unconsciously, possess a unique, unrepeatable quality that no one could intentionally replicate. In this way, they hold an innate creativity born from the unintentional actions of human beings.
